I have not experienced any transmission problems with this year Civic. Usually the noise that you describe is more tire related. A mechanical whine usually doesn't go away after ten minutes. These Civics do have issues with tire wear and depending upon what type of tire is on the vehicle they can make a variety of noises.

It could just be low, so change the transmission fluid now and see if it helps. You might be on the lookout for a used transmission, or start pricing a trans rebuild of the current one. If the noise persists and gets louder at some point you are looking at some transmission work.

On a manual transmission vehicle, the gears you use that drive the car forward are curved where the reverse gear is a spur gear so it will make more noise. If the car is an automatic, the noise comes from a sun gear that runs off of the torque converter. Its basically the same thing. Long story short, this is normal.
